

Ethan Paisley

Ari Moshe - Essentials Course

20/04/2024 at 10:41 AM

Aquarius AC Analysis

Aquarius in 1st House

Indicates a desire to self-actualise one's own unique genius by breaking free from total conditioning. Early in life, this person may experience a detached or reserved self-expression due to conditioning, ie 'children are to be seen not heard'. This conditions the child to devalue their own self-expression, and instead seek it in groups, communities, or sects of society. This person may gain mastery or popularity in a particular domain of society. Their life can become about maintaining this popularity or social belonging, until the illusion cracks and they realize there is a deeper inner genius arising within them. This can cause them to consistently retreat from society, abandon their social groups, and shift priorities. These unpredictable moves reflect the unpredictable genius of our universe. Through the various twists and turns of their life, the Aquarius 1st house person is seeking to turn divine intelligence into earthly innovation. Since there is nothing more divine than our interconnectedness to everything, this person's life will constantly reflect a process of unlearning separation and aligning with oneness. This awakening can set them up to innovate, create, and influence the masses on levels we have never seen. Simultaneously, it can be draining, existential, and incredibly lonely.

Leo in 7th House

Indicates one's unique self esteem and sense of creative freedom comes from their relationships. If their identity was silenced in youth, they may find a sense of identity 'in the crowd'. Similar to the Libra archetype, Leo in the 7th house is finding a unique sense of self through its relationships. While this can make the person a natural extrovert, it can also take a toll on their self esteem if they're not constantly being social (or admired publicly). This can create anxiety around loneliness and a perpetual need to have others around. It can also create a tendency to center the conversation around oneself and talk over others, as a form of protecting against rejection. Their relationships transform when they learn to see each person as a creative individual with something unique to contribute. This takes the individual recognizing that they, too, are a unique individual! While the Aquarius polarity can teach this, it can also re-trigger memories of when one was told they didn't feel special or seen. This person can rely on Taurus in the 4th house to build the emotional resources they need to have a healthy sense of self esteem – more on this later.

Pisces in 2nd House

Indicates a need to have 'nothing to worry about' when it comes to their personal well-being. One way this can manifest is as total neglect of personal well-being: they fail to schedule doctors appointments, forget meals, or abuse drugs and alcohol. Another way this can manifest is by being hugely attached to their personal well-being, and getting lost in making tons of money, hustling, and in the process, exhausting themselves. Or they could be struggling with a disease like anorexia: trying so hard to 'look' well, that in the process, they become deeply unwell. These scenarios speak to an archetype of masochism, or the sense of pleasure one gets from depleting themselves. Both scenarios point to a fundamental lack of clarity around one's essential needs. There are a couple potential reasons for this. One reason could be their parents were highly generous with their material resources, depriving the child from learning how to manage their own. Alternatively, the child was deprived of material resources and so never learned how to properly manage them, thus attaching absolute meaning to them. Both scenarios create an all-or-nothing sort-of mentality around personal responsibility and material security. In both scenarios, these topics are difficult to think about, and so like Pisces, we would rather 'surrender' and leave our physical/material worries to somebody else. That way, there is 'nothing to worry about'.

Virgo in 8th House

Indicates one is looking to transcend the realm of duty and responsibility. This can mean one wishes to become so rich that they never have to worry about money. It can also mean one is highly dependent on their routines and work to the point of it becoming addictive. In both scenarios, this person is looking for deeper meaning beyond daily duties and responsibilities. Being rich and materially secure indicates the freedom to explore and know oneself. Virgo and the 8th house both concern moving beyond the self into something beyond it. This polarity can help teach Pisces in the 2nd house about its priorities and needs: to create a bed of security that allows it to get to know itself. This archetype reminds me of a story I once heard about a sex worker who suffered abuse and healed through Christianity. After leaving the sex industry, she was forced to get a day job and found healing in a religious community. In this story, she was humbled to the requirements of everyday life (the day job, Virgo) and found a way to transcend the mundane (the church, new desire, 8th house). While the desire could at one point have been the desire to never face the mundane, at a certain point, the desire could become greatly to experience the mundane and ultimately to experience oneself. Another archetype is the wealthy career person who gets rid of everything and moves to a small country town in the middle of nowhere to find out what really matters.

Aries in 3rd House

Indicates a learning style and social life that is self-driven. This is a person who may have always “stood out” in school, whether it be academically, socially, or both. This could have forced them to push past their peers academically, excelling quickly to high positions of intellectual prestige. It could have also forced them to withdraw from school early to pursue alternative education paths more conducive to their learning needs. In either case, these people naturally “stand out” in their communities and this can cause a mentality of separation leading to isolation. At the same time, it gives them a vantage point in seeing education or social life differently.

Libra in 9th House

Indicates one’s awakening to their higher purpose is highly dependent on their relationships. These people might get into relationships that awaken their passion or deeper calling. At the same time, the person being helped can lose their sense of individual autonomy and original goal in the process. They can become suitors to another person’s goal and neglect their own. This is the archetype of the guitarist who plays in a band with an impressive lead singer, but neglects his own dreams of singing with the hopes the lead singer will launch him into success.

Taurus in 4th House

Indicates an emotional nurturing style that is deeply materially-focused. This person may have grown up with nothing, and thus food, clothes, shelter came to symbolize basic emotional security. On the other end of the spectrum, this person may have grown up with everything, and difficult emotions were instead treated with lavish shopping trips or travels. This also shows this person's mother, and perhaps both parents, were highly concerned with survival. The observed way of being emotionally secure was by being materially secure. This could have meant a mother struggling with poverty or a mother struggling with the existential dread that comes from living in a void of materialism. Either way, inner security was strongly tied with outer security. This can also lend itself to one wanting a great public image, and fears of not living up to an image of success that one was brought up to expect. Alternatively, this could describe a person who is the breadwinner for their family. They view themselves as the first person in the family to 'make it' and put pressure on themselves to provide for them.

Scorpio in 10th House

Indicates a desire to merge oneself with a force greater than themselves in society. This can manifest as an eagerness towards fame, corporate success, or a recurring theme, wealth. It can create a workaholic and an obsession with being at the top of one's game. This sort of ambition, however, may be a gamble for resources and leave them continually in debt to their passions. This placement indicates somebody who may be very fixed in what they want to do, but be forced to change countless times out of evolutionary necessity. Since Scorpio deals with taboos, they also may end up in careers that their families or broader society rejects. Sex work, tantric massage, psychic mediumship, medicinal cannabis are examples that come to mind. Through these paths, the soul is developing a fundamental tenacity within themselves that may have been underdeveloped during childhood (Taurus/4th House polarity).

Gemini in the 5th House

Indicates one's creative expression and personality is highly multi-faceted. This archetype reminds me of an actor: somebody whose self expression comes from wearing multiple faces. In creative domains, this lends them a caliber of genius. In their personal life, it could cause them to feel quite lost about who they fundamentally are. Sagittarius in the 11th mirrors Leo in the 7th, which is that they could be trying to find who they are in the crowd or by having strong public influence. Sagittarius in the 11th encourages them to explore the groups and passions that strike a deeper meaning within them. Gemini in the 5th House gives them permission to change their minds on a whim if something has lost meaning and passion and recalibrate to something new. This could happen so often, however, that it becomes a tactic of avoiding their own fear of social rejection at doing something they really love.

Sagittarius in the 11th House

Indicates one carries a tremendous ability to influence groups of people with their unique philosophies and discoveries. It can also indicate a social life where one feels 'lost'. Similar to having Aquarius in the 1st house, they may need space to roam from group-to-group to find out who they are. There could be a tendency to be highly sociable but still feel isolated in social settings. Gemini in the 5th House reflects this archetype, where perhaps one is good at having several faces around several different kinds of people, but inherently is missing a sense of who they are and where they belong. Gemini in the 5th House also gives them permission to change their mind about who they are and with whom they surround themselves with. Sagittarius in the 11th House carries a shadow in this regard that could come across as lying. They may lie to their friends, or even the public, about what they stand for in order to be socially accepted. They have a talent for being so convincing in these roles that they may in fact feel trapped by them. Once again, Gemini shows them many creative paths and asks them to take a step outside of what they've attached themselves to to become more self-actualized.

Cancer in the 6th House

Indicates emotional security is tied in with routines and daily responsibilities. There could be a feeling of home in the workplace or during the daily grind. It may actually point to not having a home, feeling uncomfortable in their home, or as I've explored, a deep fear of loneliness. These people are likely very nurturing when they're at work. They care a lot about the projects and duties they're involved with. At the same time, their emotional health could greatly suffer from the breadth of their routines and responsibilities. They may actually need to consider how they are balancing their emotional health with their physical work, and consistently ask themselves if their work is emotionally serving them. This placement reminds me of a therapist, or somebody who helps people work on their emotional lives for a living. Alternatively, this person could greatly benefit from regular therapy, breath work, or yoga to settle their nervous systems. They need to develop a sense of an inner home they can bring with them everywhere.

Capricorn in the 12th House

Indicates an awakening to one's societal conditioning and a resurrection of their inner authority. There could be a pressure to "be of" society from a young age. In response, there may have been a rebellion against society and a creation of a unique inner authority. Absolute meaning can be attributed to the inner authority they build for themselves, making it impossible to trust or let in others. This may also show up as tremendous difficulty accepting criticism, for fear it would push them back into conditioning and feelings of powerlessness. At a certain point, this person will have to reconcile with the limitations and even corruptions of the rules they've set for themselves, and ask for help. In asking for help from a higher source, Capricorn in the 12th can advance towards the spiritual path and unite their inner authority with the love of their Source. Herein they have the potential for spiritual mastery, and become a consultant for others seeking to achieve liberation from their suffering.